Also, in cases where you are playing high-low games never turn down lowball offer in the game if you are meeting with no high and more lows. You can work towards hitting the low half of the pot. No money is better than some money indeed. Even if you are going to have a quarter low, you will still be winning more than what you actually did invest, except in rare situations where the money you win might be less than what you invested.

In cases where the bluff is going to be too intimidating in lowball games in high-low games, it should be noted that the high person is going to be sure with his nut hand to the finals and he is going to invest in all your aggression, making the situation more costly for you. Bluffing in lowball games of the pure type and high-low lowball games is lot different. Especially in high-low games you need to remember that you bluff might scare the qualifying low and it will not scare the nut high who is sure of himself. Never consider your bluffing tricks vacuum because the high person is staying in for a better reason and he is not bothered to fold by your qualifying low.

Most of the poker decisions in lowball games are spontaneous and a majority of them are not pre-planned. There are going to be relatively very strong or very weak hands that will dictate the lowball tactic in extreme approaches of folding and aggression. Borderline decisions on whether to call, raise or fold might also be an approach to slow playing, but they might not be yielding like the aggressive approaches.

The choices of playing in lowball must be clearly connected to the benefits expected out of them. These choices of play should make the benefits visible only to the player and the approach should be unpredictable to the end player. In cases where the choice of playing in lowball is going to be predictable opponents can play in a way that it will be less yielding for you. In some cases you have to be predictable because the opponent might not be able to react when he does not know what exactly is happening in the table.
